Knowing What They're Going to Say Before They Say It: Mastering Genre Recognition as a Predictive Skill

This workshop introduces attendees to genre theory and teaches the skill of genre recognition. Attendees will be guided in the recognition of generic elements of discourse and will be empowered to enhance their predictive skills, thus increasing their self-confidence and composure while improving the accuracy and effectiveness of their interpretations.

Presented by Daniel Greene

Daniel Greene, BA, CI and CT, NIC Master, has been interpreting since 1990 in educational, academic, business, medical, conference, performing arts, and video settings. His love of arts and literature informs his work, and his passion for elevating the sign language interpreting profession drives him to study lesser-known aspects of our work and teach interpreters new skills.
